Dulles Brothers Guide Nation's Foreign Policy

CPYRGHT

BY JAMES MARLOW

WASHINGTON, May 1 (AP)—This country may not be able to judge during their lifetime the success, or failure, of a pair of brothers who hold two of the most important jobs in the government.

As head of the Central Intelligence Agency (C.I.A.), Allen W. Dulles, 63, supplies his brother, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, 68, with information which helps shape American foreign policy.

Secretary Dulles has an obligation, as foreign policy guide in a democratic society, to keep the public as informed as possible on what the foreign policy is and the reasons behind it.

Because too much revelation at a given moment might defeat the purpose of a policy, Secretary Dulles' wisdom, or lack of it, may not appear for a month or a year and the full results may not be visible for a generation.

But C.I.A. Dulles has no obligation at all to keep the public informed. On the contrary. His agency was created to be, because of the nature of its work, the most secret in government.

So the full achievements, or mistakes, of C.I.A. Dulles may never publicly be known. Even Congress, which checks on every other government agency, has comparatively very little information about the C.I.A.

Congress doesn't even know how much money it spends or how many people work for it. C.I.A. Dulles is answerable only to members of four congressional committees: Armed Services and Appropriations subcommittees of both houses.

While members of those groups have said on the floor of Congress C.I.A. Dulles is frank in answering their questions, they also have said they are careful not to pry too deeply into his agency's operations.

It has secrets, they say, which they don't want to be responsible for knowing.

This bothered Senator Mansfield (D.-Mont.) so much that he wanted Congress to set up a special committee of members of both houses, with a staff to assist them, to keep a constant eye on the C.I.A.

His effort was turned down. The basic reason why fellow senators voted against him was this: They think members of Congress talk too much and the best way to keep C.I.A. secret is to keep its secret.

Last year the special commission headed by former President Hoover looked into the C.I.A. and generally gave it a pat on the back. But it had some reservations.

It said Dulles was a hard worker but tried to do too much by himself. And the commission expressed disappointment that the C.I.A. wasn't getting more information from behind the Iron Curtain.

The C.I.A. evaluates information gathered by its own and other government agents overseas and presents this to the National Security Council (N.S.C.).

The N.S.C., composed of President Eisenhower, Secretary Dulles and other top officials, is the highest and most important policy-making body in the government. Eisenhower meets with it every week.

Recently, as a result of Hoover Commission recommendations, Eisenhower appointed a committee of distinguished citizens to look into C.I.A. operations, but only periodically, and report to him.
